4 cups cooked rice
2. Dice shallot and grate ginger to have it ready.
1 shallot, diced, 2 inches fresh ginger, peeled and grated on a microplane
3. Heat a large skillet over medium-high heat and add sesame oil. Once hot, add in ground beef. Break the beef up into small bits.

5. Add the coconut aminos and fish sauce and cook for another 3-5 minutes, until the liquid evaporates and the beef develops crispy, caramelized bits on the bottom.

6. If you are making the optional sauce, mix the mayo and hot sauce in a small bowl.
1/4 cup mayo, 1 tbsp hot sauce

Notes

- Nutrition estimates are per serving and estimate provided for reader benefit. Estimates do not include optional toppings or sauce for this recipe. See our full nutrition information disclosure here.
- The coconut aminos linked to in the recipe are the aminos we use (Coconut Secret coconut aminos). Braggs brand aminos are NOT the same thing. Braggs liquid aminos are a soy-based and much saltier than coconut aminos. If you use Braggs aminos, we suggest using only 2-3 tbsp to start and adjusting to taste.

- As an alternative to coconut aminos, you can make your own using our DIY coconut aminos substitute recipe.
- If you wish to omit the fish sauce, you can replace it with more coconut aminos. Since fish sauce is salty, you may need to add salt to suit your taste.
